

Refine your hierarchy into five distinct levels, here's a suggested formal and legal naming convention for each level:

1. Divisions: These are the broadest categories grouping related major areas of service.
2. Departments: Within each Division, there are Departments focused on specific areas related to the Division's overall purpose.
3. Sections: Each Department can be divided into Sections that handle more specialized tasks within the Department.
4. Services: The specific offerings provided by each Unit.

Organizational Structure

Here's how your structure might look using this five-level hierarchy:

Division: Design and Planning

- Department: Interior Design
 - Section: Residential Design
 - Services:
 - Complete Home Design
 - Room-specific Design

Your proposed coding hierarchy using the format ABCDEE is both structured and scalable. Here's how you can define and name it formally:

Coding Hierarchy Explanation

- A: Division Code (1 letter, 26 possible divisions)
- B: Department Code (1 letter, 26 possible departments within each division)
- C: Section Code (1 letter, 26 possible sections within each department)
- D: Unit Code (1 letter, 26 possible units within each section)
- EE: Service Code (2 hexadecimal digits, 256 possible services within each unit)

Example Breakdown

- Division: A
 - Department: B
 - Section: C
 - Service: EE

For instance, the code ABC12 might represent:

- A: Division 1 (e.g., Design and Planning)
- B: Department 2 (e.g., Interior Design)
- C: Section 3 (e.g., Residential Design)
- 12: Specific service (e.g., Complete Home Design)

Naming the Code

You can call this coding system the Organizational Service Identifier Code (OSIC). This formal name reflects its purpose and function within your company.

Usage on Employee ID Cards

On employee ID cards, this code can be referenced as the Employee Service Code or simply Service Code to indicate the employee's associated division, department, section, and service. This identifier helps to quickly determine the employee's role and responsibilities within the organization.

Services used in multiple divisions or Departments

If some services can be used across multiple sections or departments, you need a flexible way to track and manage these shared services. To handle this, you can adopt a mapping or cross-referencing system in addition to the hierarchical code. Here's how you can approach it:

Modified Approach: Cross-Referencing Shared Services

1. Primary Coding System (ABCDEE): Keep your primary hierarchical coding system as ABCDEE to organize your services systematically.
2. Service CatLog and Mapping
 - Create a centralized service CatLog that lists all services with their unique codes.
 - In the CatLog, include a mapping table that shows which sections, departments, and divisions each service is associated with.

Implementation Steps

Step 1: Define the Primary Coding System

Continue using the ABCDEE system for structuring the services hierarchically.

Step 2: Create a Centralized Service CatLog

Develop a document or database that includes:

- Service Code (ABCDEE)
- Service Description
- Associated Sections (list of sections where the service is used)
- Associated Departments
- Associated Divisions

Step 3: Cross-Reference Services

For each service in the CatLog, list all the sections, departments, and divisions that use that service. This creates a flexible mapping that allows services to be associated with multiple parts of the organization.

Example CatLog Entry

Service Code	Description	Sections	Departments	Divisions
A1B2C3D4E5	Complete Home Design	Sec1, Sec2, Sec3	Dept1, Dept4	Div1, Div2
A1B3C4D5E6	Kitchen Renovation	Sec2, Sec5	Dept2, Dept3, Dept5	Div1, Div3
A2B4C5D6E7	Custom Furniture Design	Sec1, Sec3, Sec4	Dept1, Dept2, Dept5	Div2, Div4

Step 4: Use a Service Mapping Code

To further simplify tracking and referencing, you can assign a unique mapping code for each service. This code could be a combination of letters and numbers that uniquely identifies each service irrespective of its hierarchical classification.

Example Mapping Code

- Mapping Code: A simple alphanumeric code like S001, S002, etc.
- catalo Entry:
 - S001: Complete Home Design
 - S002: Kitchen Renovation
 - S003: Custom Furniture Design

Example of Integrated ID Card

Company Name

Name: John Doe

Position: Interior Designer

Service Code: A1B2C3D4E5 (S001)

Division: Design and Planning

Department: Interior Design

Section: Residential Design

Service: Complete Home Design

Mapping Code: S001

Employee ID: 123456

Summary

1. Primary Hierarchical Code (ABCDEE) for structural organization.
2. Centralized Service CatLog to list services and their associations.
3. Cross-Reference Table to map services to multiple sections, departments, and divisions.
4. Mapping Code for easy referencing of services.

This combined approach maintains the clarity of the hierarchical system while allowing for the flexibility needed to handle shared services across multiple organizational units.
